Nominations to Article III Lower Courts by President George W. Bush During the 110th Congress

Summary

This report tracks nominations made by President George W. Bush to judgeships on the U.S. courts of appeals, the U.S. district courts, and the U.S. Court of International Trade — the lower courts on which, pursuant to Article III of the Constitution, judges serve “during good Behaviour.” It lists and keeps count of all nominations made to these courts during the 110th Congress, including pertinent actions taken by the Senate Judiciary Committee and the full Senate. It also tracks the number of judicial vacancies on the courts (including vacancies classified by the federal judiciary as “judicial emergencies”), the number of nominations pending to fill the vacancies, and the names of the pending nominees. It presents the number of persons nominated by President Bush to each category of lower Article III court during his entire presidency (breaking down each total to show the number confirmed, pending, returned and not re-nominated, and withdrawn). Last, it provides tabular and graphical comparisons of President Bush’s lower court nominee statistics with those of the four Presidents who immediately preceded him.

As of October 20, 2008:

- President Bush had nominated 23 individuals to the U.S. courts of appeals during the 110th Congress, with the Senate having confirmed 10 of them, and with 3 withdrawn by the President.
- President Bush had nominated 79 individuals to the U.S. district courts during the 110th Congress, with the Senate having confirmed 58 of them, and with 1 withdrawn by the President.
- There were 11 judicial vacancies on the U.S. courts of appeals, with 10 nominations pending to fill these vacancies.
- There were 25 U.S. district court vacancies, with 16 nominations pending to fill these judgeships, and an additional 4 nominations pending to fill future district court vacancies.
- No vacancies had occurred on the U.S. Court of International Trade during the 110th Congress (and thus no nominations have been made to the court during the Congress).

During the entire presidency of George W. Bush (from January 20, 2001, to October 20, 2008), there have been 373 nominees to Article III lower court judgeships. Of the 373 total nominees, 30 are pending, 324 have received Senate confirmation, 9 have been returned to the President in a previous Congress and not resubmitted, and 10 have been withdrawn by the President and not resubmitted.

For corresponding information about President Bush’s appeals and district court nominations during earlier Congresses, see CRS Report RL31868, U.S. Circuit and District Court Nominations by President George W. Bush During the 107th-109th Congresses.

This report will be updated to record new actions by President Bush, the Senate Judiciary Committee, or the Senate involving Article III lower court nominations.

Nominations to Article III Lower Courts by President George W. Bush During the 110th Congress

Introduction

Under Article III of the Constitution of the United States, the appointment of individuals to lifetime positions on the lower federal courts (the U.S. courts of appeals, U.S. district courts, and U.S. Court of International Trade) requires Senate confirmation.¹ In recent years, Congress has expressed increasing interest in the nomination and confirmation process for lower federal court judges.² During the 110th Congress, the number of lower court nominations by President George W. Bush that have been confirmed or were likely to be confirmed has been a subject of continuing Senate interest.³

To provide Congress with a current overview of the lower court appointment process, this report tracks the status of certain lower court nominations made by President George W. Bush during the 110th Congress. The report deals primarily with nominations to lower Article III courts (those courts on which judges serve

“during good Behaviour”), while also accounting for infrequent nominations to the small number of territorial district judgeships, which have fixed-term appointments.⁴

The Article III Lower Courts

Article III, Section 1 of the Constitution provides, in part, that the “judicial Power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.” It further provides that justices on the Supreme Court and judges on lower courts established by Congress under Article III have what effectively has come to mean life tenure, holding their office “during good Behaviour.”⁵ By contrast, judges in various federal courts established by Congress under Article I of the Constitution are appointed for fixed terms.⁶ Along with the Supreme Court, the courts that constitute the Article III courts in the federal judicial system are the U.S. courts of appeals, the U.S. district courts, and the U.S. Court of International Trade. The following are thumbnail descriptions of each of the lower Article III courts:

The U.S. Courts of Appeals. These courts take appeals from federal trial court decisions and are empowered to review the decisions of many administrative agencies. Cases presented to these courts are generally considered by judges sitting in three-member panels. Altogether, 178 permanent appellate court judgeships are authorized by law.⁷ Courts within the courts of appeals system are often called “circuit courts,” because they are divided into 12 geographic circuits and an additional nationwide circuit, the Federal Circuit, which has specialized subject matter jurisdiction. In this report, nominations to U.S. courts of appeals judgeships are, at various points, also referred to as “circuit court nominations.”

The U.S. District Courts. These are the trial courts of general federal jurisdiction. Each state has at least one district court, while some states have as many

⁵ Pursuant to this constitutional language, Article III judges may hold office for as long as they live or until they voluntarily leave office. A President has no power to remove them from office. Article III judges may be removed by Congress only through the process of impeachment by the House and conviction by the Senate.

⁶ Citing the power to do so in Article I of the Constitution, Congress, in separate statutes, has created four courts of specialized subject matter jurisdiction — the U.S. Court of Federal Claims, the U.S. Tax Court, the U.S. Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims, and the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces — and has authorized 15-year judicial tenure in these courts.

⁷ On January 7, 2008, President George W. Bush signed H.R. 660, the Court Security Improvement Act of 2007 (P.L. 110-77, 121 Stat. 2534). Among other things, the act decreased the number of judgeships in the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals from 12 to 11 and, effective January 21, 2009, increased the number of judgeships on the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals from 28 to 29. Accordingly, there are 178 judgeships on the courts of appeals until January 21, 2009, when, barring any other adjustment, that number will rise to 179.

as four. There are 674 district court judgeships authorized by law, including those for the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.⁸

The U.S. Court of International Trade. This court has original and exclusive jurisdiction over civil actions against the United States, its agencies and officers, and certain civil actions brought by the United States arising out of import transactions and federal statutes affecting international trade. The court is composed of nine judges, no more than five of whom may belong to one political party.

Congress also has established district courts in the territories of Guam, the U.S. Virgin Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands. Like the U.S. district courts, the territorial courts are trial courts of general federal jurisdiction, while also having jurisdiction over many local matters that, within the 50 states, are handled in state courts. Because they are trial courts of general federal jurisdiction, whose rulings may be appealed to a U.S. court of appeals,⁹ the territorial courts can be viewed as a category of court falling within the federal district court system.¹⁰ Territorial courts, however, are not Article III courts, and judicial appointees to these courts serve 10-year terms, with one judgeship each in Guam and the Northern Mariana Islands, and two in the Virgin Islands.

Judicial Nomination Data Tracked

This report lists and keeps count of all nominations made to the above-discussed courts during the 110th Congress, including certain actions taken on these nominations by the Senate Judiciary Committee and the full Senate. The report also provides statistics for all of the nominations that President Bush has made to these courts during his entire presidency, starting with the 107th Congress in January 2001 and carrying through to the present. (Thus far in the 110th Congress, no nominations have been made either to the U.S. Court of International Trade or to the territorial district courts, although President Bush made, and the Senate confirmed, nominations to these courts during previous Congresses.)

In the following pages, President Bush's nominations to the lower Article III courts are listed or counted in Tables 1 through 6. Some of these tables, where noted, also keep track of nominations made to the territorial courts. Appendix 1 provides a brief textual overview of the principal steps in the process for appointing lower court judges.

Judicial Nomination Tables for the 110th Congress

Table 1 is a judicial vacancy table. For each type of Article III lower court — circuit, district, and Court of International Trade — it shows the number of judgeships vacant as of the date listed, as well as the number of nominations pending to fill those judgeships. Table 1 also displays the number of nominations pending to fill “future vacancies,” which occur when judges in active service announce their retirement to occur on a date that has not yet been reached or when a judge in active service indicates a plan to retire or take senior status upon the confirmation of a successor.

In addition, Table 1 shows how many of these vacancies are classified by the federal judiciary as “judicial emergencies.” For the courts of appeals, a judicial emergency is any vacancy in a circuit where there are more than 700 adjusted filings per panel, or any vacancy in a circuit that has existed for more than 18 months and where adjusted filings are between 500 to 700 per panel.¹¹ For a district court, a judicial emergency is any vacancy in a district where weighted filings exceed 600 per judgeship, or any vacancy in existence more than 18 months where weighted filings are between 430 and 600 per judgeship, or any court with more than one authorized judgeship and only one active judge.¹²

Table 2 which lists pending nominations, presents all Article III lower court nominations made during the 110th Congress that were pending as of the date listed. The table shows the date each nomination was received by the Senate, the date of any hearing on the nomination before the Judiciary Committee, and the date of any vote by the committee to report the nomination to the Senate. The table also indicates which nominations in the list are renominations — persons nominated to the same judgeship either earlier in the 110th Congress or in a previous Congress.

- a. Renomination of an individual first nominated in the 109th Congress (2005-2006).
- b. The individual received a hearing in the 109th Congress on a nomination to the same position.

Tables 3 and 4 list all nominations to the circuit courts of appeals and to the district courts, respectively, made by President Bush during the 110th Congress, as of the date listed, and any actions taken on the nominations.¹³ The nominations are listed in chronological order according to the date on which each was received by the Senate. The tables show how far along each nomination has progressed in the appointment process, with separate columns indicating the date on which any of the following occurred:

- the Judiciary Committee held a hearing on the nomination,
- the committee voted to report or take other action on the nomination,
- or
- final action was taken on the nomination.

When final action has occurred on a nomination, the nature of the action is indicated in another column, under the heading “Disposition.” (For each nomination, one of four kinds of disposition is possible — confirmation by the Senate, return of the nomination to the President, withdrawal by the President, and rejection by the Senate. During George W. Bush's presidency, however, the Senate has never voted to reject a judicial nomination.) An additional column, for nominations receiving a Senate confirmation vote, indicates whether the vote was by roll call (by supplying the roll call tally) or by voice vote.

¹³ In the event any nominations were to be made to the territorial district courts, they would be listed in Table 4, and treated as falling within the category of district court nominations, even though, as discussed above, they are not Article III court nominations. Thus far during the 110th Congress, no nominations have been made to the territorial courts.

A final column in Tables 3 and 4 presents time-span information for nominations having received final action in the 110th Congress. Specifically, for each such nomination, the column measures the number of days that elapsed between a nominee's first nomination to a particular court and the final action on this (the most recent) nomination. In some cases, a nominee has been nominated only once by President Bush for a judgeship, and the time span measured for such a nominee in the final column in Tables 3 and 4 is the number of days that elapsed between the date during the 110th Congress that the nomination was received in the Senate and the date it received final action. However, in other cases, a judicial nominee in the 110th Congress has been nominated more than once, with one or more nominations of that person having been made in an earlier Congress. For such a nominee, the final column in Tables 3 and 4 measures the number of days that elapsed between the nominee's first nomination in the earlier Congress and the date that the nominee's nomination in the 110th Congress received final action.¹⁴

Table 3 shows that, thus far in the 110th Congress, President Bush has nominated 23 individuals to circuit court judgeships,¹⁵ 10 of whom have been confirmed by the Senate, while the nominations of 3 were withdrawn by the President and not resubmitted.¹⁶ Table 4 shows that, thus far in the 110th Congress, the President has nominated 79 individuals to district court judgeships.¹⁷ Of those 79, 58 have been confirmed, while the nomination of 1 was withdrawn by the President and not resubmitted.¹⁸

¹⁸ Thus far in the 110th Congress, the nominations of two district court nominees have been

Table 5, for the present, is an empty table, which exists to account for any future nominations that President Bush might make to the U.S. Court of International Trade. (Thus far during the 110th Congress, no nominations have been made to this court.) The table is of the same format as Tables 3 and 4. Accordingly, in the event any nominations were to be made to the court, the table would list actions on the nominations by the Judiciary Committee and the Senate, any other final action taken, and number of days elapsed between the date of nomination and date of final action.

- b. For individuals nominated in a previous Congress, the values displayed in this column report the number of days which elapsed between the date of the first nomination and the date of the final action on the most recent nomination in the 110th Congress.
- c. Renomination of an individual first nominated in the 109th Congress (2005-2006).
- d. The individual received a hearing in the 109th Congress on a nomination to the same position. For additional information, see Appendices 5 and 8 in CRS Report RL31868, U.S. Circuit and District Court Nominations by President George W. Bush During the 107th-109th Congresses, by Denis Steven Rutkus, Kevin M. Scott, and Maureen Bearden.
- e. This nomination was made to fill a district court judgeship upon the elevation of U.S. district court judge Gene E.K. Pratter to the Third Circuit. (See in Table 3, above, the November 15, 2007, nomination of Pratter to the Third Circuit.) When the Pratter nomination to the Third Circuit was withdrawn on July 24, 2008, the district judgeship in question no longer needed to be filled; accordingly, the Short nomination was withdrawn, also on July 24. That same day, President Bush renominated Short to a different district judgeship in the same judicial district.
- f. Renomination of an individual nominated earlier in the 110th Congress to a different judgeship in the same judicial district. See in this table the November 15, 2007, nomination of Short, the withdrawal of that nomination on July 24, 2008, and preceding table note explaining the need for that nomination to be withdrawn.

Table 6 presents the total number of persons nominated by President Bush to each category of lower Article III court during his entire presidency. The table also breaks down each numerical total, showing, as of the date listed, the number of nominees whose most recent nominations were (1) confirmed; (2) pending in the Senate; (3) returned to the President, at the end of a Congress or at the start of a Senate recess of more than 30 days, and not re-submitted; or (4) withdrawn by the President. This table counts nominees to a particular judgeship only once, even if they were nominated to their judgeship more than once.¹⁹

a. Does not include three nominees to the territorial district courts, all of whom were confirmed prior to the 110th Congress. Judges on those courts are appointed to renewable 10-year terms. There have been no nominations to the territorial district courts in the 110th Congress.

Table 7 places the judicial nominee numbers of the George W. Bush presidency in the context of the last five Presidents. Comparison of the nominee statistics of the two-term Presidents in this group (Reagan, Clinton, and George W. Bush) reveal that, as of October 20, 2008:

- The percentage of George W. Bush's nominees confirmed to the circuit courts (71.8%) is relatively close to the confirmation percentage for Clinton nominees (72.2% for circuit courts), but well below that for Reagan nominees (88.3% for circuit courts).
- The percentage of George W. Bush's nominees confirmed to the district courts (91.3%) is more than the confirmation percentage for Clinton nominees (87.1%), but less than that for Reagan nominees (94.8%).

¹⁹ Some of President Bush's nominees were nominated to a circuit or district judgeship more than once within a Congress, or nominated to the judgeship in more than one Congress. For a listing of these nominees, as well as other Presidents' nominees to the circuit and district courts whose nominations were resubmitted from 1977 through 2006, See CRS Report RL33839, Returns and Resubmissions of Nominees to the U.S. Courts of Appeals and District Courts, 1977-2006, by Kevin M. Scott.

- The number of Bush nominees confirmed to the circuit courts (61) is somewhat below the number of confirmed Clinton circuit nominees (65) and well below the number of confirmed Reagan circuit nominees (83), while the number of Bush nominees confirmed to the district courts (261) is well below the confirmed district court nominee numbers of both Presidents Clinton and Reagan (305 and 290, respectively).

- a. The district court columns of this table account only for nominees to Article III district court judgeships, and not those to territorial district courts in the U.S. Virgin Islands, Guam, and the Northern Mariana Islands. As a result, the numbers in these columns differ somewhat from the district court data presented in Table 3 of CRS Report RL31868, U.S. Circuit and District Court Nominations by President George W. Bush During the 107th -109th Congresses, which account for nominees to the territorial courts.
- b. Does not include nominations to the Court of International Trade (an Article III Court since 1980).

To put Senate consideration of President George W. Bush's lower court nominees in additional historical context, Figures 1 (courts of appeals) and 2 (district courts) illustrate the average number of days that have elapsed from first nomination to final action for judicial nominations for each of the last five Presidents. Both Figures 1 and 2 separate confirmed nominees from those who were not confirmed by the Senate (those who were rejected by the Senate or withdrawn by the President, or whose most recent nomination was returned by the Senate and not resubmitted by the President).

Figure 1. Average Number of Days From First Nomination to Final Senate Action, Nominees to the U.S. Courts of Appeals, January 20, 1977-October 20, 2008

Source: CRS Judicial Nominations Database. Numbers atop the bars indicate the average number of days to final action. Unconfirmed nominees include those whose nominations were rejected by the Senate, withdrawn by the President, or returned to the President and not resubmitted. Data are current as of October 20, 2008, and do not include nominees pending as of that date.

Compared with recent Administrations, Figure 1 shows that President George W. Bush's appeals nominees experienced, on average, the highest number of days elapsed from first nomination to final Senate action. The data presented in Figure 1 also reflect consistently increasing average time to final action for confirmed nominees over each of the last three presidencies and increasing average time to final action for unconfirmed nominees over each of the last four presidencies. The average time to final action for President George W. Bush's confirmed nominees to the courts of appeals, 350 days, is 47% greater than the average time to final action for President Clinton's confirmed nominees to the courts of appeals and 407% greater than the average time to final action for President Carter's confirmed nominees to the courts of appeals. The average time to final action for President George W. Bush's unconfirmed nominees to the courts of appeals (not including those currently pending in the Senate), 859 days, is 96% greater than the average time to final action for President Clinton's unconfirmed court of appeals nominees and 341% greater than the average time to final action for President Carter's unconfirmed court of appeals nominees.

Figure 2. Average Number of Days from First Nomination to Final Senate Action, Nominees to the Article III U.S. District Courts, January 20, 1977-October 20, 2008

Source: CRS Judicial Nominations Database. Numbers atop the bars indicate the average number of days to final action. Unconfirmed nominees include those whose nominations were rejected by the Senate, withdrawn by the President, or returned to the President and not resubmitted. Data are current as of October 20, 2008, and do not include nominees pending as of that date.

Many of the patterns observed in time to final action for court of appeals nominees can also be observed in time to final action for district court nominees. Compared with recent Administrations, Figure 2 shows that President George W. Bush's district nominees experienced, on average, the highest number of days elapsed from first nomination to final Senate action. The data presented in Figure 2 also demonstrate consistently increasing average time to final action for confirmed nominees over each of the last three presidencies and increasing average time to final action for unconfirmed nominees over each of the last two presidencies. The average time to final action for President George W. Bush's confirmed nominees to the district courts, 178 days, is 31% greater than the average time to final action for President Clinton's confirmed nominees to the district courts and 151% greater than the average time to final action for President Carter's confirmed nominees to the district courts. The average time to final action for President George W. Bush's unconfirmed nominees to the district courts (not including those currently pending in the Senate), 520 days, is 30% greater than the average time to final action for President Clinton's unconfirmed district court nominees and 206% greater than the average time to final action for President Carter's unconfirmed district court nominees.

Appendix. The Appointment Process for Nominations to Article III Judgeships

Under the Constitution of the United States, the President and the Senate share the responsibility for filling vacancies in the federal judiciary.²⁰ While it is the President who nominates persons to fill federal judgeships, the appointment of each nominee also requires Senate confirmation. Although not mentioned in the Constitution, the Senate Judiciary Committee also plays an important role midway in the process — after the President selects, but before the Senate as a whole considers, the nominee. It is the Judiciary Committee in the Senate that has committee jurisdiction over most federal judicial nominations — namely, those to the Supreme Court, the courts of appeals, the district courts (including the territorial district courts), the U.S. Court of International Trade, and the U.S. Court of Federal Claims.²¹

The need for the President to make a nomination to an Article III court judgeship arises when a vacancy occurs on the court, due to the death, retirement, or resignation of a judge (or when a judge announces the intention to retire or resign).²² In considering judicial candidates for possible nomination, the President frequently receives recommendations from U.S. Senators.²³ By longstanding custom, dating back to the mid-1800s, Senators of the President’s party have provided Presidents such advice, recommending candidates for judgeships situated in their states or linked by tradition to their states.²⁴ Also by custom, Senators not of the President’s ²² A vacancy also would occur if a judge were removed by Congress through the impeachment process, but historically such occurrences have been extremely rare. Specifically, in our nation’s history, “there have been 15 impeachment trials in the Senate, 11 against judges. Seven trials have resulted in convictions, all against judges.” CRS Report RL32935, Congressional Oversight of Judges and Justices, by Elizabeth B. Bazan and Morton Rosenberg.

²³ See CRS Report RL34405, Role of Home State Senators in the Selection of Lower Federal Court Judges, by Denis Steven Rutkus.

²⁴ A scholar on the Senate’s role in judicial appointments, writing in 1953, described the “well-established custom, which has prevailed since about 1840,” wherein U.S. district judges “are normally selected by senators from the state in which the district is situated, provided they belong to the same party as the President.” By contrast, the President was said to have “a much freer hand in the selection of judges to the circuit courts of appeals, whose districts cover several states....” Joseph P. Harris, The Advice and Consent of the Senate (Berkeley, CA: University of California Press, 1953; reprint, New York: Greenwood Press, 1968), p. 314, (page citations are to the reprint edition). party play a consultative role and may convey to the President their views about candidates under consideration for judgeships in their states.²⁵ The judgeships for which a Senator ordinarily recommends nominees, or is consulted, are those in the U.S. district court or courts which geographically fall within the Senator's state and the U.S. court of appeals circuit of which the Senator's state is a geographic part — provided the circuit judgeship historically has been associated with the Senator's state.²⁶

After selecting someone to fill a judicial vacancy, the President formally submits a nomination in writing to the Senate.²⁷ Usually on the same day it is received by the Senate, the nomination is referred to the Judiciary Committee. The committee's first formal public step is to hold a hearing on a nomination. The committee subsequently meets again to vote on whether to report the nomination to the full Senate. A committee vote to report (even a vote to report with an unfavorable recommendation) sends the nomination forward to be considered by the Senate as a whole, while a vote against reporting (historically, a very rare occurrence) prevents the nomination from going forward, and in effect defeats the nomination in committee. The next step in the appointment process occurs when the Senate votes to confirm or disapprove the nomination. A vote to confirm requires a simple majority of Senators present and voting.

discussion of the continuing role played by Senators in recommending judicial candidates, Sheldon Goldman, Picking Federal Judges: Lower Court Selection from Roosevelt Through Reagan (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1997) (in each presidency chapter, under the heading "Senators and Selection").

²⁵ See CRS Report RL32013, The History of the Blue Slip in the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 1917-Present, by Mitchel A. Sollenberger. See also Elliot E. Slotnick, "A Historical Perspective on Federal Judicial Selection," Judicature, vol. 86, July-August 2002, where, at p. 13, the author observes that the blue slip procedure of the Senate Judiciary Committee "has worked to ensure that home state senators of both parties, whether or not they are of the president's party, have some say when judges are being nominated from their state."

If the Senate votes to confirm the nomination, the Secretary of the Senate then attests to a resolution of confirmation and transmits it to the White House.²⁸ In turn, the President signs a document, called a commission, officially appointing the individual to the court. The signed commission is then “returned to the Justice Department for engraving the date of appointment (determined by the actual day the president signs the commission) and for the signature of the attorney general and the placing of the Justice Department seal.”²⁹ Once the President has signed the commission, the incoming judge is eligible to be sworn into office. The new judge actually takes two oaths of office — a judicial oath, as required by the Judiciary Act of 1789, and a constitutional oath, which, as required by Article VI of the Constitution, is administered to Members of Congress and all executive and judicial officers.

As with nominations in general, judicial nominations sometimes fail to advance through each procedural step in the appointment process. After referral to committee, a nomination might not receive a hearing or, after receiving a hearing, might not receive a committee vote on whether it should be reported. Even if favorably reported by committee, a nomination might not receive a vote by the Senate on whether to confirm. The majority leader might not schedule a vote, or some Senators might oppose taking such a vote and a “super-majority” of three-fifths of the full membership of the Senate would be needed to invoke cloture on the nomination.³⁰ If a nomination fails to receive a Senate vote on confirmation, it ultimately will be either withdrawn by the President or returned to the President by the Secretary of the Senate upon a Senate adjournment or recess of more than 30 days.³¹ The Senate may, by unanimous consent, carry nominations over a recess of more than 30 days.

³¹ Rule XXXI, paragraph 6, Standing Rules of the Senate, provides, in part, that “if the Senate shall adjourn or take a recess for more than thirty days, all nominations pending and not finally acted upon at the time of taking such adjournment or recess shall be returned by the Secretary to the President and shall not again be considered unless they shall again be made to the Senate by the President.”
